ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This volume presents seventeen original articles written by historians, librarians and bibliographers who share their knowledge of the history of printing and the book trade in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. I want to express my gratitude to all of those scholars for their generous contributions. I would also like to extend a special thank you to Professor Andrew Pettegree and to Brill for believing in the value of the volume from its inception and for exercising patience with it through to its publication.

I also want to make a special acknowledgement of the invaluable source of knowledge and inspiration that Professor Jaime Moll has been for me. Unfortunately, he passed away during the preparation of his article for the volume.
