

INVESTMENT ARBITRATION IN CENTRAL AND EASTERN EUROPE

ELGAR ARBITRATION LAW AND PRACTICE

The Elgar Arbitration Law and Practice series is a library of works by leading practitioners and scholars covering key areas of commercial and investment arbitration. The titles in the series are analytical in approach, highlighting and unpicking the legal issues that are most critical and relevant to practice. Designed to be detailed, focussed reference works, the books in this series aim to offer an authoritative statement on the legal and procedural framework in both established and emerging areas of arbitral practice. The series will include texts covering the rules of specific arbitral bodies and national arbitration laws, regional approaches to commercial and investment arbitration, as well as sector-specific arbitration.

Titles in the series include:

International Commercial Arbitration and the Brussels I Regulation
Louise Hauberg Wilhelmsen

PREFACE

Central European Member States are the litmus paper of investment arbitration in Europe. On the one hand, as capital-importers, they are popular targets of investment claims: the overwhelming majority of the cases against EU Member States are proceedings launched against countries from the region. On the other hand, they, arguably, may be characterized by intensive intervention in the market, the state's strong regulatory role and the entrenched social status of public services, which, by their nature, may interfere with the economic interests of foreign investors.

Unfortunately, notwithstanding its relevance as a battlefield of investment arbitration, Central European experiences have not been analysed in a comprehensive manner. Investment protection disputes are fairly complex: arbitral tribunals judge measures that are part of the core of national regulatory sovereignty, such as national privatizations, protection of public health, regulation of prices and curbing of monopolies. Although the complexity of investment disputes makes the proper understanding of the context essential, observers not "fluent" in the local jurisdiction may, at times, face unsurmountable difficulties grasping the factual, economic, political and regulatory background.

The unique edge of this volume is that it brings to the light the core of the European experiences on investment arbitration with a contextual analysis addressing the economic perspectives, the political background and the national regulatory environment. It is the first to present the Central and Eastern European case-law of investment arbitration in a comprehensive manner to make the experiences of Europe's investment law battlefield fully accessible for practitioners and scholars alike.

The volume is made up of 14 national chapters covering Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Croatia, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Macedonia, Poland, Romania, Slovakia, Slovenia and Serbia and Montenegro and reporting on the Central European experiences from an insider's perspective.

The purpose of the national chapters is to give a comprehensive overview of the national experiences on investor-state arbitration in terms of treaty landscape, domestic legislation and (first and foremost) case-law. Given that they are written by "native speakers" of the local jurisdiction, they use sources less accessible for the wider international community. The added value of the national chapters emerges from the circumstance that investment disputes are very complex and have several political, economic and regulatory aspects which often cannot be grasped in the absence of local expertise and the command of the local language. Hence, investment arbitration cases, much more than other controversies, can be grasped only on the basis of the totality of the aspects of the matter, which are normally not fully reproduced in the award and not fully perceivable for experts coming from foreign jurisdictions. National chapters provide such an "insider's" contextual analysis.

The first section of the national chapters covers the policy and treaty landscape, extending to the reasons advanced for recourse to investor-state arbitration, the country's attitude towards investor-state arbitration, the eventual political or scholarly criticism advanced in this regard

INTRA-EU BITS AFTER ACHMEA – A

1. The legal analysis: what is the holding?	0.05

Due to its immense practical importance, no volume on investment arbitration in Central Europe may avoid addressing the most significant recent development concerning the region: intra-EU BITs after the CJEU’s ruling in Achmea.<sup>1</sup> In this case, the Court pronounced an arbitration clause in an intra-EU BIT non-compliant with EU law because it found that it endangered the stability of the EU’s judicial architecture and encroached on EU courts’ privilege to interpret EU law.<sup>2</sup> While the judgment came as a huge surprise, its repercussions and aftermath are still uncertain. It is unclear what the judgment’s holding is, whether it covers arbitration clauses different from the one that reached the CJEU and what impact it will have on investment arbitration in Central Europe.<sup>3</sup> Nonetheless, it is certain that the ruling generated a huge pessimism. 0.01

A. INTRA-EU BITS: A TRULY CENTRAL EUROPEAN ISSUE

- 0.02 Although intra-EU BITS are not problems related specifically to Central European Member States, it was the accession of these countries that brought them to light. Intra-EU BITS lie at the heart of investor-state disputes involving Central Europe: approximately two-thirds of the cases in the region are intra-EU matters.<sup>4</sup> This means that terminating intra-EU BITS would do away with the overwhelming majority of investment arbitration cases in the region. Perversely, as “usual defendants” of intra-EU investment arbitration proceedings, this development would clearly serve the interests of Central European Member States.
- 0.03 Intra-EU BITS had been a time bomb in the EU’s constitutional architecture for decades, which was triggered by the accession of Central European countries in 2004, 2007, and 2013.<sup>5</sup> Old Member States abstained from entering into intra-EU BITS and the very few they concluded were not applied. After the foundation of the European Economic Community (EEC) – apart from a couple of exceptions – Member States refrained from concluding BITS with sister states. There appears to have been a general agreement not to apply BITS concluded before enlargement.<sup>6</sup> Although Germany entered into such an agreement with Greece in 1961<sup>7</sup> and Portugal in 1980,<sup>8</sup> these treaties contained no investor-state but only inter-state arbitration clauses and have never given rise to arbitral proceedings after the accession of Greece in 1981 and of Portugal in 1985.<sup>9</sup> Hence, for a long time, the problem of intra-EU BITS had remained theoretical.

B. WHAT IS THE IMPACT OF THE ACHMEA RULING?

Nonetheless, BITs proliferated beyond the frontiers of the realm: Central European countries – which were not members of the EU at that time – concluded several BITs with the then Member States. During the half-century between the foundation of the EEC and the enlargements in 2004, 2007, and 2013, Central European countries concluded numerous BITs with the then members of the EU. With the accession, these agreements turned into intra-EU treaties<sup>10</sup> and put a new subject on the table of EU law.<sup>11</sup> 0.04

B. WHAT IS THE IMPACT OF THE ACHMEA RULING?

1. The legal analysis: what is the holding?

The first question that comes to the practical lawyer's mind when reading the Achmea ruling is obviously the judgment's legal purview, or put in legalese: what is the holding? The ruling is very recent and the CJEU has had no chance to revisit the issue, except AG Bot's general statement in Case 1/17<sup>12</sup> that Achmea does not concern extra-EU investment treaties. 0.05

Preliminary rulings interpret EU law in the context of a flesh and blood case<sup>13</sup> and it is not rare that the CJEU distinguishes earlier rulings on the basis of the fact pattern or by means of the reasons it was based on.<sup>14</sup> 0.06

The language of the ruling is rather limiting: the operative part refers to all-embracing dispute settlement clauses providing for ad-hoc arbitration. 0.07

Articles 267 and 344 TFEU must be interpreted as precluding a provision in an international agreement concluded between Member States, such as Article 8 of the Agreement on encouragement and reciprocal protection of investments between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Czech and Slovak Federative Republic, under which an investor from one of those Member States may, in the event of a dispute concerning investments in the other Member State, bring proceedings against the latter Member State before an arbitral tribunal whose jurisdiction that Member State has undertaken to accept.<sup>15</sup>

- 0.08 Accordingly, the ruling clearly does not deal with the substantive provisions of BITS. Although these may be of little use without the possibility of an arbitral procedure, they seem to have remained valid, raising the possibility of enforcing the substantive provisions of intra-EU BITS before national courts. Indeed, there is no reason to assume that national courts should not apply properly promulgated investment treaties, given that most BITS do not contain any provision depriving state courts of their jurisdiction and an allegedly invalid arbitration clause should be a fortiori no reason for that.
- 0.09 Furthermore, the dispute settlement clause embedded in Article 8 of the Netherlands-Czechoslovakia BIT submitted “[a]ll disputes between one Contracting Party and an investor of the other Contracting Party concerning an investment of the latter,” (emphasis added) to ad-hoc arbitration. This implies that institutional – most notably ICSID – arbitration may not be covered by the ruling, same as investment arbitration under the Energy Charter Treaty.<sup>16</sup>
- 0.10 In the same vein, the ruling may, arguably, not extend to arbitration clauses restricting jurisdiction to expropriation matters. Contrary to the rules on the freedom of investment – which have their counterparts in EU internal market law – these provisions do not overlap with EU law. Hence, conferring jurisdiction on an arbitral tribunal as to these provisions may not encroach on the prerogatives of EU courts.
- 0.11 Finally, a dispute settlement clause providing specifically for arbitration within the territory of the EU might, arguably, also pass muster. Although the CJEU noted that the scope of review of an arbitral award under German law was insufficient to protect the autonomy of EU law, the ruling may be interpreted as suggesting that the possibility of an appropriate review by a Member State court might save an arbitration clause. Article 8 empowered the arbitral tribunal to select the place of the proceedings, and although it chose Germany, it could have equally chosen a place outside the EU.<sup>17</sup> In this case no Member State would have had power to carry out an annulment procedure.

B. WHAT IS THE IMPACT OF THE ACHMEA RULING?

There are arguments to go even further with the limitation of the holding. 0.12
 One may reasonably argue that investment arbitration is ruled out by EU law only in matters where the investment treaty and EU law overlap, if there is no overlap, there is no clash either.<sup>18</sup>

The arbitral award in Achmea rested on considerations that, in fact, closely 0.13
 paralleled the EU internal market's rules on freedom of establishment and free movement of capital. It was one of the rare investment cases, which, instead of issues of property protection, dealt significantly with freedom of payments – repatriation of profits. According to the CJEU's jurisprudence, profiting from economic activities pursued in another Member State, what necessarily embraces the distribution and repatriation of profits, is an integral part of the concept of freedom of establishment and the free movement of capital.<sup>19</sup> Although the Slovak measure was also judged under the free and equitable treatment standard, the key issue was a Member State measure that under EU law may be conceived as a restriction of free movement.

It has to be taken into account that although fundamental human rights and 0.14
 rule of law are the EU's cornerstones,<sup>20</sup> EU law contains no effective mechanism of general application to compel Member States to respect them.<sup>21</sup> While the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights does provide for the protection of property,<sup>22</sup> it is, in principle, applicable to the institutions and bodies of the EU and applies to Member States only when and to the extent they are implementing EU law.<sup>23</sup> Taking this into account, it may be a situation different from the facts of Achmea if a Member State terminates an individual concession contract by legislative means, refuses to issue a license for dubious reasons or an enterprise is not afforded fair trial in a domestic regulatory matter. This finds reflection in the opinion of AG Wathelet in Achmea, which appears to contain a very ironic reply to the Commission allegation that in the EU there is no need for BITS.

I do not know what the Commission means by 'full protection', but a comparison between the BIT and the EU and FEU Treaties shows that the protection afforded to investments by those Treaties is still a long way from being 'full'. In my view, intra-EU BITS, and more particularly the BIT at issue in the main proceedings, establish rights and obligations which neither reproduce nor contradict the guarantees of the protection of cross-border investments afforded by EU law.<sup>24</sup>

- 0.15 All in all, it seems that while Achmea features an anti-arbitration attitude – which may guide future cases – the ruling’s holding is highly questionable. The above considerations demonstrate that the judgment’s scope is much narrower than the echo it is generating. Hence, although the CJEU’s anti-arbitration attitude revealed itself, the status of intra-EU BITS is not fully settled.

2. The arbitral practice: theme and variations for a holding-analysis

- 0.16 The question of holding is especially interesting because arbitral tribunals have started down-reading Achmea right away.<sup>25</sup> These cases did nothing but delimited the ruling’s purview and preserved the prior arbitral practice in relation to matters that could be distinguished from Achmea. Indeed, the pre-Achmea era had seen numerous arbitral awards rejecting the “intra-EU” defense.<sup>26</sup> Arguably, the down-reading of Achmea may be viewed as an attempt

<sup>25</sup> The Achmea defense was raised in Antin Infrastructure and others v. Spain and in Antaris Solar GmbH and Michael Gode v. Czech Republic but the tribunal decided not to consider it. In Antin Infrastructure and others v. Spain (ICSID Case No. ARB/13/31) the proceedings were closed before the adoption of the Achmea ruling and the tribunal rejected the claimant’s motion to reopen the proceeding in view of the ruling. See paras 55–58. In Antaris Solar GmbH and Michael Gode v. Czech Republic (PCA Case No. 2014-01), the arbitral tribunal refused to consider the Respondent’s arguments based on Achmea not only because it considered them belated but also because the Czech Republic “waived any objection on the EU jurisdictional point.” Para 73.

of arbitral tribunals (legal community) to push back against the political pressure imposed by the European Commission and to remind Member States and the EU that they cannot ignore the legal obligations they undertook. As noted below, this aspect was explicitly addressed by the arbitral tribunal in Vattenfall.<sup>27</sup>

In Masdar Solar & Wind Cooperatief U.A. v. Kingdom of Spain,<sup>28</sup> the arbitral tribunal found that Achmea does not apply to investment arbitration under the Energy Charter Treaty (ECT), arguing that the ruling extends to intra-EU investment treaties and the ECT is not such a treaty, as it has a good number of signatories who are not members to the EU.<sup>29</sup> 0.17

The same line of reasoning was followed in Vattenfall AB and others v. Federal Republic of Germany,<sup>30</sup> where the tribunal emphasized that the ECT's arbitration clause (Article 26) is unambiguous in subjecting Contracting Parties, including the EU itself, to arbitration and, thus, reflects the EU's unequivocal assent to arbitration without any carve-out as to intra-EU BITs. 0.18

187. It would have been a simple matter to draft the ECT so that Article 26 does not apply to disputes between an Investor of one EU Member State and another EU Member State as respondent. That was not done; and the Tribunal has been shown no indication in the language of the ECT that any such exclusion was intended. The

Tribunal's responsibility is to interpret and apply the ECT, which defines the Tribunal's jurisdiction.

188. Taking into account the wording of Article 26 ECT, read together with the above provisions and the EU Statement, the Tribunal cannot agree that intra-EU arbitrations have been carved out from the application of Article 26 ECT. As a Contracting Party to the ECT, the EU has accepted the possibility of arbitration proceedings under Article 26, even against itself, without making a distinction between investors from EU or non-EU Member States. There is no language suggesting that EU Member States have "transferred competence" to the EU in respect of intra-EU arbitrations, or that such arbitrations are barred.

0.19 The tribunal attached great importance to the fact that, contrary to the EU's normal practice, the ECT contains no "disconnection clause." Such clauses are meant to ensure that mixed agreements apply to third states only and not as between Member States.<sup>31</sup> Very tellingly, "the travaux préparatoires of the ECT reveal that during negotiation of the ECT, the EU had proposed the insertion of a disconnection clause [but] that clause was ultimately dropped from the draft treaty."<sup>32</sup>

0.20 The path beaten in Masdar and Vattenfall was followed in subsequent arbitral matters. In Foresight Luxembourg and others v. Kingdom of Spain,<sup>33</sup> the tribunal, quoting Masdar at great length, concluded that Achmea was "irrelevant to the Respondent's jurisdictional objection."<sup>34</sup> In the same vein, in Greentech Energy Systems A/S and others v. Italian Republic,<sup>35</sup> the tribunal held that "the decision [in Achmea] has no preclusive effect such as to remove its jurisdiction over the present dispute"<sup>36</sup> and reiterated that the ECT is different from the intra-EU BIT that was addressed in Achmea.<sup>37</sup>

0.21 In UP (formerly Le Chèque Déjeuner) and C.D Holding Internationale v. Hungary,<sup>38</sup> the tribunal held that in Achmea the BIT provided for ad-hoc arbitration and, hence, the ruling does not apply to ICSID arbitration.

257. Thereby, [pursuant to Arts. 53 and 54 of the ICSID Convention] Hungary as a party to the ICSID Convention is expressly bound by the Tribunal's Award in the present case, has no option of appeal outside the ICSID system, and has to recognize the present Award as binding and enforce the pecuniary obligations imposed by this Award within its territories as if it were a final judgment of a court in Hungary.

258. The Achmea Decision contains no reference to the ICSID Convention or to ICSID Arbitration. Therefore, and in view of the above mentioned determinative differences between the Achmea case and the present one, the Achmea Decision cannot be understood or interpreted as creating or supporting an argument that, by its accession to the EU, Hungary was no longer bound by the ICSID Convention.

259. There is no rule in EU law that provides that these obligations under the ICSID Convention are inconsistent with EU law or that obligations under the ICSID Convention have been terminated or replaced by the accession to the EU. Regardless of what may be argued from the Achmea Decision regarding BITs between EU Member States, as regard jurisdiction under the ICSID Convention it is undisputed that Hungary did not expressly terminate its participation in and submission to arbitration pursuant to the ICSID Convention when it joined the EU in 2004.

260. The Tribunal also cannot find that the accession to the EU was an implied withdrawal from the ICSID Convention. There was no denunciation of the ICSID Convention, pursuant to Art. 71 thereof.

263. The Achmea Decision itself does not support any other conclusion. As mentioned above, the CJEU did not say anything in the Achmea Decision about the effect of its Decision on consent to arbitration under Art. 25 of the ICSID Convention.

Although these awards, at first glance, may appear to be in sharp contrast to the CJEU's attitude in Achmea, after all, it is not the court's state of mind but its ruling that is binding.

3. The political analysis

Contrary to the above uncertainties, the Commission made utmost use of the emerging possibility to wipe out intra-EU BITs, as it considers them to be irreconcilable with the European integration. After the adoption of the Achmea ruling, the Commission quickly released a communication to demonstrate that EU law also provides protection in cases where intra-EU BITs do.<sup>39</sup> Nevertheless, the fact that the Commission felt that it needed to launch out into explanations suggests that the "same protection" argument is not as clear as the Commission would like it to be. 0.22

<sup>39</sup> Commission Communication on the Protection of intra-EU investment, COM(2018) 547/2. In Greentech Energy Systems A/S and Others v. Italy (SCC Case No. 095/2015), the tribunal emphasized that the Communication is not an "authoritative interpretation of the scope of Achmea." Para 402.

INTRA-EU BITS AFTER ACHMEA – A CROSS-CUTTING ISSUE

- 0.23 While EU law does have a comprehensive regime on free movement, which actually exceeds the benefits secured by BITs, it does not provide for a comprehensive protection of property rights, including the protection of legitimate expectations. This proposition is not changed by the fact that there are various means in EU law that can be used for this purpose, given that EU law is a torso in this regard.
- 0.24 As a fundamental principle, EU rule of law and human rights (including property protection) apply only to matters coming under the scope of EU law. The EU Charter of Fundamental Rights applies only to EU institutions, it applies to Member States only when they are implementing EU law.<sup>40</sup> The CJEU's ruling in Siragusa<sup>41</sup> demonstrates well how this affects the protection of investments. Here, the Court encountered a genuine investment protection case: Mr. Siragusa made alterations to his property in a landscape conservation area and was ordered to restore the site to its former state. He argued that the acts of Italy impaired his right to property enshrined in Article 17 of the Charter. It is easy to parallel this fact pattern with the archetype of investment protection cases. However, the CJEU refused to inspect whether the property rights of Mr. Siragusa were violated. It held that the Italian authorities were not implementing EU law<sup>42</sup> and confirmed that the purpose of the Charter is to ensure the protection of fundamental rights in the sphere of EU activity, that is, it is not meant to shelter fundamental rights from Member States in general.<sup>43</sup>
- 0.25 Nonetheless, the above plight did not discourage the Commission from putting political pressure on Member States to sign up for a political declaration confirming the position that intra-EU BITs are dead and promising to inform arbitral tribunals about this stance and to terminate the existing intra-EU BITs by 6 December 2019 with all sunset and grandfathering clauses being considered inapplicable after this date.<sup>44</sup> While most Member States were quick to declare even investment arbitration under the ECT invalid, six of them rejected that conclusion. It is beyond legal analysis to ponder on the motivations and economic interests of these Member States and how these impacted on the legal position they took.

B. WHAT IS THE IMPACT OF THE ACHMEA RULING?

This arrangement appears to be most unfortunate for various reasons. It shows well why legal issues should be decided by courts of law (and arbitral tribunals) and not by politicians making political declarations. The Commission's endeavors resulted in three declarations in accordance with the Member States' divergent economic and political interests and, not surprisingly, all of them jumped the delicate issue of holding-analysis. Although Member States did not consistently follow their own economic interests when deciding whether to sign up for the joint declaration (old Member States were interested in maintaining the scheme of intra-EU BITs), six Member States made two declarations separate from the majority. Five Member States (Finland, Luxembourg, Malta, Slovenia, and Sweden) made a joint declaration<sup>45</sup> and Hungary a separate one.<sup>46</sup> There is a subtle but substantial difference between the two "dissenting" declarations in terms of Achmea's applicability to ECT arbitration. The joint declaration takes up a waiting position: it stresses that the ruling is "silent on the investor-state arbitration clause in the Energy Charter Treaty" and proposes to await the judicial ascertainment of whether it applies to the ECT or not.<sup>47</sup> On the contrary, Hungary's declaration categorically expresses the stance that Achmea does not concern arbitration under the ECT.<sup>48</sup> 0.26

45 Declaration of the representatives of the governments of the Member States, of 16 January on the enforcement of the judgment of the Court of Justice in Achmea and on investment protection in the European Union.

46 Declaration of the representative of the government of Hungary, of 16 January on the legal consequences of the judgment of the Court of Justice in Achmea and on investment protection in the European Union.

47 "The Member States note that the Achmea judgment is silent on the investor-state arbitration clause in the Energy Charter Treaty. A number of international arbitration tribunals post the Achmea judgment have concluded that the Energy Charter Treaty contains an investor-State arbitration clause applicable between EU Member States. This interpretation is currently contested before a national court in a Member State. [This is a reference to the annulment proceedings before the Svea Court of Appeal in Case No 4658-18 Novenergia II – Energy & Environment (SCA) (Grand Duchy of Luxembourg), SICAR v. the Kingdom of Spain (SCC Arbitration, 2015/06).] Against this background, the Member States underline the importance of allowing for due process and consider that it would be inappropriate, in the absence of a specific judgment on this matter, to express views as regards the compatibility with Union law of the intra EU application of the Energy Charter Treaty."

48 "8. Hungary further declares that in its view, the Achmea judgment concerns only the intra-EU bilateral investment treaties. The Achmea judgment is silent on the investor-state arbitration clause in the Energy Charter Treaty (hereinafter: 'ECT') and it does not concern any pending or prospective arbitration proceedings initiated under the ECT. 9. Against this background, Hungary underlines the importance of allowing for due process and considers that it is inappropriate for a Member State to express its view as regards the compatibility with Union law of the intra-EU application of the ECT. The ongoing and future applicability of the ECT in intra-EU relations requires further discussion and individual agreement amongst the Member States."

C. WHAT REMAINS OF INTRA-EU BITS AFTER ACHMEA?

- 0.27 The impact of Achmea will be, in various regards, what the majority of the legal community thinks of it and the ruling does leave a few doors open that could be of practical relevance.
- 0.28 First, as argued above, the holding of the ruling is far from limitless, leaving arbitral tribunals with a substantial residual power. The arbitral tribunals' down-reading is based on a reasonable analysis. The ruling does leave the status of the ECT open and it is, indeed, at least dubious whether it can be stretched to this. The ECT is a multilateral investment treaty having quite a few parties which are not members to the EU. The arbitral tribunal in Vattenfall argued very convincingly that the EU's attempt to suppress arbitration under the ECT may be easily viewed as an attempt to get out of freely assumed duties. This issue is being currently considered by the Svea Court of Appeal in Sweden in Novenergia II v. Spain.<sup>49</sup> The Svea Court of Appeal was requested to refer this issue to the CJEU.<sup>50</sup>
- 0.29 Second, an interesting question is whether the invalidity is categorical or merely an objection that may be waived or subject to procedural hurdles. Articles 53–54 of the ICSID Convention preclude all appeals and remedies under national law and oblige Contracting States to afford the same treatment to ICSID awards as to the “a final judgment of a court in that State.” Recently, in PL Holdings S.à.r.l. v. Republic of Poland,<sup>51</sup> the Svea Court of Appeal refused to set aside an arbitral award resting on the Luxembourg-Poland BIT, because Poland's jurisdictional objection was belated. Although Poland raised the “intra-EU” defense in the course of the arbitral proceedings, this occurred beyond the deadline set by the rules of the Arbitration Institute of the Stockholm Chamber of Commerce. Hence, the Svea Court of Appeal held that the objection was time-barred and could not be used as a ground of annulment, as the argument that there was no valid arbitration agreement was precluded by the Swedish Arbitration Act.<sup>52</sup>
- 0.30 Third, an interesting experiment could be the application of the substantive provisions of intra-EU BITs by national courts. Notably, the CJEU's ruling in Achmea dealt solely with an arbitration clause, it clearly did not address substantive provisions protecting investors, by way of example, from illegal and uncompensated expropriation. The fact that the parties stipulated arbitration does not imply that they ousted Member State courts' jurisdiction to apply these provisions, if they are requested to.

Fourth, the discourse on Achmea has so far neglected a very important issue: 0.31 treaty shopping. Whatever the proper interpretation of the ruling may be, the general feeling is that it made arbitration under intra-EU BITs very risky. This may incite investors to seek alternative ways of protection and one of the obvious options is treaty shopping. EU investors may make investments in other Member States via third countries (or transfer their interests to special purpose vehicles in third countries) and claim the benefits of extra-EU BITs in intra-EU matters.<sup>53</sup>

While some have acknowledged treaty shopping with aversion, the vast 0.32 majority of arbitral awards, in fact almost all of them, have been intensely dismissive of piercing the corporate veil in cases where the BIT contained no specific requirements of substantive link or denial of benefits clause. In reality, "it has become so easy for foreign investors to relocate to different jurisdictions that the contents of nationality have largely lost their essence."<sup>54</sup> Although piercing the corporate veil is a living doctrine, it is exceptional and applies only to abusive practices. According to the arbitral practice, the mere fact that the nationals of a country establish a company in another country is, in itself, not an abuse justifying the piercing of the corporate veil.<sup>55</sup>
